How to automatically forward text messages to email android. How to forward email to text android. How to automatically forward sms android. How to forward email in android.

If you find yourself forwarding messages to your other email account on a regular basis, why not automate this task? Using the handy filter feature in Gmail, you can automatically forward certain emails when they hit your inbox. Different than forwarding an individual email in Gmail, creating a filter rule to do so requires you to connect that forwarding email address. If you already have one set up, then you're good to go with the steps below. If not, check out our how-to for setting up a forwarding email address in Gmail. Open the Filter Setup You can open the filter setup in Gmail easily using one of three methods. Use whichever is simplest or most convenient for you. Click the gear icon to access your Settings, and then click "See All Settings" in the sidebar. Select the Filters and Blocked Addresses tab and click "Create a New Filter." If you've just set up a forwarding address in the Forwarding and POP/IMAP tab, you can also find it by clicking "Creating a Filter." Yet another method is using the Search box at the top of Gmail. Click the arrow on the right side of the search box. This combines looking for an email with creating a filter. Enter the Filter Criteria You'll see the most common fields where you can enter the criteria that you want Gmail to look for. These include From, To, Subject, Has the Words, Doesn't Have the Words, and Size. You also have checkboxes for emails that contain attachments and whether or not you want to include chats. Complete one or more fields to define the emails that you want to forward. Here are a couple of examples to get you started. Maybe this Gmail account is for business, but you often receive personal emails. You can enter email addresses for friends and family members in the From field, or start typing and pick a suggestion. Then, forward the messages to your personal account. Perhaps you're planning an event and want to forward all emails pertaining to it to another email address. Enter the words that you want to include in the Has the Words or Doesn't Have fields if they'll likely appear in the body of the email. You can also use the Subject line field if you prefer. Once you have the criteria entered that you want to use, click "Create Filter." Select the Filter Actions Next, you'll select the actions for the email based on the criteria that you just entered. Check the box for "Forward It To" and choose the forwarding email address in the drop-down list. You can also select more actions if you like. For instance, maybe you want the email marked as read, sent to your archive, or deleted. Check the boxes for all the actions that you want to apply in addition to forwarding. When you finish, click "Create Filter." Note: Once you create the filter, it will forward only new emails delivered to your Gmail inbox. If you want emails that you've already received forwarded, you'll have to do that yourself. Edit the Filter or Stop Forwarding You can edit or delete a filter that you create in Gmail anytime. Click the gear icon to access your Settings, and then click "See All Settings" in the sidebar. Select the Filters and Blocked Addresses tab to see a list of your current filters. To make a change, click "Edit" to the right of the filter. Make your adjustments and click "Update Filter." To stop using a filter altogether, click "Delete" to the right of it. Then, confirm by clicking "OK." If you continually receive emails that are better addressed through a different email account, consider setting up a filter to automatically forward specific messages in Gmail. An Android Trojan app that sends SMS messages to premium-rate numbers has expanded globally over the past year, racking up bills for users in over 60 countries including the U.S., malware researchers from Kaspersky Lab said. The malware program, which Kaspersky products detect as Trojan-SMS.AndroidOS.FakeInst.ef, dates back to February 2013 and was originally designed to operate in Russia. The Trojan disguises itself as an application for watching porn videos, but once installed on a device it downloads an encrypted configuration file and starts sending SMS messages to predefined premium-rate numbers, depending on the user's mobile country code. For example, when the malware encounters mobile country codes—special codes used by carriers to identify mobile networks in different countries—in the range of 311 to 316, which correspond to the U.S., the malware sends three messages that cost $2 each to 97605, the Kaspersky researchers said in a blog post Wednesday. The malware can also intercept incoming messages and can receive commands from command-and-control servers to send specific text messages to particular phone numbers. And there's more than one The Kaspersky researchers have identified 14 different versions of Trojan-SMS.AndroidOS.FakeInst.ef and determined that the malware has spread to 66 countries. "This particular program was the first SMS Trojan to reach users in the U.S.," said Roman Unuchek, senior malware analyst at Kaspersky Lab via email. According to the antivirus vendor's statistics, the number of Trojan-SMS.AndroidOS.FakeInst.ef victims in the U.S. is still low, with the largest number of infections being recorded in Russia and Canada. Cybercriminals have used premium-rate SMS Trojans for years to steal money from Android users in China, Russia and other countries where the use of non-official app stores is common. However, Trojan-SMS.AndroidOS.FakeInst.ef and another widespread Trojan called Trojan-SMS.AndroidOS.Stealer, which has support for 14 countries, suggest a global escalation for this type of threat. "It appears that the cybercriminals have built up sufficient resources to expand their illegal business on a global scale," Unuchek said. The Kaspersky researchers did not clarify how the rogue apps that carry this Trojan are being distributed. The apps are not likely downloaded from Google Play, because Google has gotten much better at policing its app store in recent years. So Android users are probably affected after specifically configuring their phones to allow the installation of apps from "unknown sources." Many users might have that setting enabled because it's needed to install some legitimate applications that can't be distributed through Google Play for policy reasons—for example some online poker clients. In addition, attackers could also use social engineering techniques to trick users into enabling support for unknown app sources. Kaspersky Labs first announced its detection of what appeared to be the first of several SMS Trojans on Google's Android operating system on August 9th. The application released in Russian markets outside of Google's Android Market, was disguised as a media player. Once installed, the code would send 3 premium SMS messages, effectively transferring the US equivalent of ~$18 from the user to the recipient company. On Wednesday, Kaspersky Labs expert Denis Maslennikov revealed a new Trojan very similar to the first. Again targeting Russian users, this app is disguised as a pornographic media player. What is interesting is not the recurrence of the premium SMS dialing (sending an SMS to a pay service, such as donation codes for the Red Cross, or ringtone services advertised on Television), but the method in which installing the app is brought to users attention. The authors of this particular trojan use a tactic known as search engine poisoning to spread the malware. That is, they crafted Websites specifically to appear near the top of search results for certain search queries. By placing malicious websites at the top of search results, mobile users who are by nature looking for fast easy results are more likely to click through without due diligence of ensuring the top hits are safe. This has been a common theme of PC-based malware and is now a lucrative trend in the mobile domain for an increasingly popular platform. When the trojan is installed, it'll ask you to access Android's messaging system. If you deny it, the malicious portion of the code will not be allowed to function. It's a lesson in both trusting your application sources, and paying attention to mandatory security prompts for sure. Remember that once you have given permission to an application, it rarely if ever will need to request permission again. The simple media browser in this case, can wantonly send SMS messages whenever it is active, and you will be none the wiser, till you see the bill. More from PCWorld's GeekTech blog... None of us would mind letting go of formal, lengthy Emails and replacing them with SMS entirely. Mailtime sorts your email in an SMS styled interface, allowing you to use the @ sign to mention and assign tasks, and create to-do lists. It integrates with Dropbox for attachment management, but also allows you to add photos from your phone. You're still able to add someone to the conversation with just a couple of clicks. What it doesn't offer, however, is easy ways to organize mail. There's no priority system or folders to depend on for organization. You do have a search feature so you can quickly locate an Email using keywords or contact names, but this probably isn't a primary mail client—instead, it's something that can be helpful when you're in the middle of a long email conversation. Hit the link below to try it out.MailTime (Free) | iTunes App Store via TechCrunch Nintendo has updated the company's first smartphone app, MiiTomo. This latest version bumps the app up to 1.2 and adds some interesting new features.
